A LUMBERMAN'S LIFE.

RAFTING LOGS IN THE STREAMS OF PENNSYLVANIA—THE FASCINATION AND DANGER OF THE WORK.

(From the Philadelphia Times.)

The post of danger is on the jams, and the most skillful men are sent. Pitfalls will open in the midst of a solid mass of timber and then close in a moment, after having dragged a man down beyond a help; a log will move a few inches slowly and unnoticed, and then with a movement like an arrow strike a luckless man, crushing the life out of him in an instant. On every side dangers are lurking, and he is fortunate that passes a spring without injury. There is something attractive in the looks of a log jam, and if the fascination that danger has been taken from it still men would rather work there than on the shore. The long, narrow sea of white timber, creaking and writhing with the action of the current; the water roaring and foaming as it escapes from its prison under the logs, and the logs themselves molded into fantastic shapes by the terrible pressure behind them, all have an attraction for men who are impressed by strength or picturesqueness. After a jam is formed the jam-breakers are sent on it, and the boss may be seen directing the work and examining to see what holds it. Sometimes it is one log, and again it will be several knotted together in such a way as to almost baffle the most experienced, but generally one or two "floods" will start it. The floods are made by the large floating dams, and will raise the water several feet, lifting the jam up into the air as if it were a toy-boat. If a specially large flood is needed, two and sometimes three are used at a time, the flood-gates of the lower dam being opened just as the water from the dam above reaches it. In this way an immense "splash" is obtained that only the most refractory jams can successfully combat.

There are few grander sights to be seen anywhere than the moving of a large log jam. The grand strength with which they move, tearing out the largest trees and forcing everything before them, and the fierce motion of the logs, like the crazy shuttles of some giant machine, and the perfection of force, compel enthusiasm from the most phlegmatic spectator. The wild hurrahs of the men on the logs add to the excitement, and the observer is quite sure to find himself running along by the side of the moving mass, cheering as if he had won a battle. The men who are at work scarcely realize the danger, they are so carried away with the excitement, and they may be seen jumping from one log to another and cheering as if perfectly safe on solid ground instead of on a dangerous sea of moving logs that are continually rising and falling and dodging this way and that, driven by the flood of water furnished by the floating dams. The skill shown by experienced flouters in riding logs is wonderful, and it seems impossible for human dexterity to reach such perfection. A jam will sometimes form where precipitous rocks make it impossible for the men to escape on either side, and they must ride the logs for several rods. In such places the water is always swift, sometimes forming rapids, and watching the logs jumping, tumbling, rolling along with a deafening roar, one wonders how men can live among them for an instant. Behind the jam breakers come the sakers with their teams, drawing the logs that jams have forced far out on the banks and rolling in those on the shores. "Bringing up the rear" is the technical term given this work by the lumbermen, and it is no more desirable than occupying the same position in the army. It is terribly cold work, too, wading in the snow water, ice freezing on the levers and on the clothing wherever exposed to the air, and makes the spectators shiver to see them. But the hardy lumbermen don't mind it. They expect it, and their strength is equal to the demand.

At meal-time they all come with prodigious appetites for their rations, that are as hot as they can be eaten. Hot biscuits, potatoes, eggs, meat, tea, coffee and everything else, solid and liquid, are smoking like the steam from a locomotive, while generous draughts from the cup that inebriates add their fuel to the general fire. No cold victuals are current in log-floating time. All the chill required is found in the ice-water, and something has to be taken to counteract its influence.

The nights are spent in camps where the roaring fires, burning all night, partially dry the wet clothes that must be put on in the morning. Coming into the room where the clothes are hung, a great cloud of steam is seen that rises to the ceiling, where it condenses, and either falls down in drops or evaporates on the warm boards, and the clothes are all smoking as if engaged in a contest. When the river is reached the life changes. There are few jams to break, less wading and more riding in boats, and all the work is easier and less dangerous. If the logs stop on a rock that is out in the middle of the river, a boatman carries some men there, who may roll them off and get into the boat again without danger and without getting wet. There are logs along the shore to be rolled in, but the water is not as swift as in the runs, and in the deep water a man can stand with comparative safety. Everything is easier, and the day the river is reached is almost a holiday among the lumbermen.

A Stranger's Mistake.

A Western merchant, who wanted to do some sight seeing and buy his fall stock at the same time, entered a dry-goods jobbing-house on Broadway, and accosted the first person he met with:

"Are you the proprietor here?"
"Not exactly the proprietor," was the reply; "at present I am acting as shipping clerk, but I am cutting my cards for a partnership next year by organizing noon prayer-meetings in the basement."

The stranger passes on to a very important personage with a diamond pin, and asked:

"Are you the head of the house?"
"Well, no; I can't say I am at present, but I've hopes of a partnership in January. I'm only one of the travelers just now, but I am laying for a $2,000 pew in an up-town church, and that will mean a quarter interest here in less than six months."

The next man had his feet up, his hat back, and a 20-cent cigar in his mouth, and he looked so solid that the stranger said:

"You must run this establishment?"
"Me? Well, I may; an it very soon. At present I am the bookkeeper, but I am expecting to go into a church choir with the old man's darling, and become an equal partner here."

The stranger was determined not to make another mistake. He walked around until he found a man with his coat off and busy with a case of goods, and he said to him:

"The porters are kept pretty busy in here, I see?"
"Yes," was the brief reply.

"But I suppose you are planning to invest in a gospel hymn-book and sing the old man out of an eighth interest, aren't you?"

"Well, no, not exactly," was the quiet reply; "I'm the old man himself."

And all the stranger said, after a long minute spent in looking the merchant over, was:

"Well, darn my buttons!"

The Louisville School of Law.

From Kentucky Law Journal.

The second session of the Louisville School of Law will begin January 16, 1882, which will be a good time for students to enter the school, as most of the topics of importance in the practice are yet to be treated. The school, we are gratified to learn, is in a prosperous condition, and, under the direction of Hon. William Chenault, LL. D., is properly ranked among the best law schools in the Union. Professor Chenault is not only a learned lecturer, but an enthusiastic devotee to the great work which he has undertaken. This being the only institution of the kind in the State, every Kentuckian should be concerned in the welfare of the school.

From present indications, it is very probable that the Mormon question will come up in Congress and that a long, earnest and fierce debate will ensue, ending only when Mormonism and polygamy have been turned inside out. The fight will begin when it is proposed to seat Cannon, the Mormon delegate, who was placed on the pay roll of the House as a delegate by Clerk Adams, in place of Campbell, who holds a certificate signed by the Governor of Utah, as the delegate elect. The transcript of the election returns which have been forwarded to Washington, however, and signed by the Secretary of Utah Territory, shows that Cannon received 18,568 votes and Campbell but 1,357. A majority of the Democratic members of the House hold that the transcript of elections returns entitle Cannon to be seated on a prima facie case. The Republicans are opposed to the seating of Cannon on the ground that being a Mormon he is not a citizen of the United States and is not therefore entitled to admission to Congress. This point will bring up the Mormon question, and will probably result in some decisive action regarding this infamous crime against civilization and morality.

As evidence of the return to the reckless extravagance that drove Grantism out in disgrace is given in the recommendation of the Secretary of War that the standing army be increased to thirty thousand men. This increase, which the exigencies of the country in no wise demands, would add five thousand men to the present force and would cost annually, at least five million dollars. At present the frontier is sufficiently guarded, and if it was not, the thousands of idlers who throng about the fancy posts in various parts of the country, doing little else than drawing their pay, might be used to make the service efficient. The country does not need a larger army. The present force is more than ample for all the contingencies that are likely to arise, and largely more than ample. It is only General Sherman and the old Military Ring who are demanding more troops at this time, and it is merely to supply places for certain army favorites of these great men and also to prepare for such events as were witnessed in 1876, when Mr. Hayes by the aid of bayonets, was put into an office to which he had not been elected by the votes of the people. The move signifies a restoration of the methods in vogue during the time of Grant and a return to the wild legislation and looseness of that period. The party that votes this increase may expect to be put out of congress whenever the honest voters of the country have the opportunity to express at the polls their condemnation of such action.

There is nothing new in the murder mystery at Ashland at present, with the exception that a colored barber named Willis Hockaday, who made some remark which indicated that he knew something about the murder, has been arrested at Louisa, Ky. Detective Norris still sticks to his theory that old man Gibbons committed the horrible deed.

A story is afloat at Washington of serious trouble between Congressman Blackburn and Gen. Burbridge. It is said that Dr. Ousley, of Kentucky, wanted an office in one of the departments there, and went to Blackburn for help, mentioning Burbridge as his friend Blackburn denounced Burbridge in violent terms because of his war record, saying his district was dotted with the graves of men murdered by Burbridge's orders during the war. This language was reported to Burbridge and he wrote to Blackburn demanding a retraction. No reply has yet been received. It is understood that Burbridge justifies his course in Kentucky by claiming to have merely carried out the orders of General Sherman and that he has the orders in writing.

Full Particulars of the Mishap to the Bostona.

The railroad packet Bostona, plying between Cincinnati and Huntington, in passing on her down trip under the Louisville Short Line Railroad bridge at Cincinnati, was struck by the wind Friday morning, which was blowing a fierce gale at the time, and turned her around, so that when she was about midway under the bridge the wheel house, struck one of the piers on the larboard side and completely demolished it, tearing off the barber shop, bar and cook house, which are situated on this side of the boat.

When the wheelhouse struck the pier it swung the boat around, so that only through the prompt and immediate action taken by Captain Isaac Bryson her stern would have struck the other pier. If this had occurred, her hull undoubtedly would have been stove in and the boat would have sunk with a loss, most probably, of many lives, as there was an unusually large number of passengers on board coming to the city, either on business or to spend New Year's.

The Bostona had laid up at Dayton, Ky. to await daylight. She had made all arrangements to pass under the bridge, having taken her pipes down. When nearing the bridge the wind veered and sent the smoke towards the pilot house, preventing the pilot, Peter Boughner from seeing the bridge piers.

Immediately after the accident happened the Telegraph pulled out and in a short time was on her side and took all of the passengers on board besides some valuable cargo. The Telegraph pulled the wreck towards the Licking River, but for some reason backed again into the river and floated down stream.

A passenger from Portsmouth named Baker, at the time of the mishap, was in the outhouse which is situated in the rear of the wheelhouse that struck the pier and as the wheel house went down he jumped and landed safely on the platform of the pier, which is now about even with the waters edge. One of the crew asserted that he landed safely that he did not even get wet. He was rescued from his perilous position by the Newport ferry.

There were three men in the washroom, two of them escaping to the cabin.

Another passenger who at the time was in the barber shop jumped overboard, but was saved from drowning only in the nick of time. It is stated, however, that he received some severe injuries. The accident occurred at a quarter past seven that morning.

Besides the staving in of the side of the steamer and the washing away of the water closet, the wheel house and wash-room the cylinder timbers were knocked out of place.

After the Telegraph and the Bostona had geared the Southern Railroad bridge, the former let loose of her tow and came near herself running into a pier of the bridge. Just before this the wheel of the Bostona was carried away, leaving her to the mercy of the current and the help of the steamers Champion No. 8 and 9, which caught up to the Bostona below the bridge. On the way down, the current being so swift, owing to the high river, great fears that she might not be brought to the shore before she reached the Southern Railroad bridge. If this had occurred she would have surely struck one of the piers of this bridge, and a great disaster would have been chronicled.

On the way down the river a panic was almost inaugurated on the Bostona by some one crying "fire." The hose was brought out, but there was no need for using it, as there was no fire.

The two Champions soon secured control of the Bostona, and towed her up to the dry wharfbat at the foot of Broadway.

James Cain, the bar-keeper of the Bostona, will sustain the loss of the whole of his bar. He barely escaped with his life, as did also C. Johnston, of the barber shop and the cook of the boat. The loss will reach the neighborhood of $5,000.

The only thing that saved the Bostona from having her hull stove in, was that the shaft struck the pier of the bridge. It will take at least two weeks to repair the boat.

THE officers are hunting for William Marshall a negro, who went to the house of Ned Ryan, on Jersey Ridge, a few days ago, and made indecent proposals to Ryan's daughter, a young girl of good character, about sixteen years of age. The father armed himself with a musket to which was attached a bayonet, and in attempting to drive the negro away wounded him in the face with the bayonet. Marshall subsequently broke into the house but the young lady and her father fled and fortunately escaped violence. The negro when last heard from was at Ripley.

THE entertainment by Howorth's Hibernica troupe at the opera house last night, was an excellent one and was well attended. The matinee this afternoon and the performance to-night will doubtless attract crowded houses, as the audience last night were well pleased and speak of the entertainment in the most favorable terms. The troupe is commended in the following terms by Ohio journals.

Howorth's Hibernica Comedy Company gave an excellent entertainment to an audience of 1,400 people at the opera-house, Saturday evening—Youngstown News December 5.

Howorth's Hibernica at Garrett's Hall last night as a Thanksgiving entertainment was first-class, and had an audience which filled the room clear back to the wall and all around the edges. Howorth's is a glittering success, and the show has added much to its laurels.—Daily Herald, Steubenville.

MR. CHARLES VARIAN who was a passenger by the Bostona yesterday, when she collided with the bridge pier at Newport, arrived here this morning about one o'clock by the Telegraph. At the time of accident he was in the wash house of the boat and when that was carried away, was thrown with it into the river. He fortunately caught at one of the hogchains of the boat and clung to it until he was saved by Tom Green, a little colored boy, of East Maysville, who is employed on the boat as a cabin boy. Mr. Varian was badly cut in the back of the head and severely bruised in other places. His injuries, however, are not considered dangerous, and it is hoped he will be upon the streets again in a few days.

New York English Spoken Here.
Although I knew scarcely a word of the Spanish language on my arrival at the main gulf seaport of the republic, I had little difficulty in getting along, as there was generally some one near at hand who could act as interpreter. In many of the stores in the City of Mexico the familiar European sign of "English spoken here" is displayed. One establishment varied the announcement as follows:

NEW YORK ENGLISH SPOKEN HERE.

But this did not strike the tender chords of the hearts of our party with half the sentimental remembrance of home that was evoked when we came upon the sign made to rhyme:

Yankee gin, walk in;
Bourbon, rye, mind your eye.
Will you take a nip of rum?
Just step in, it's lots of fun.

"Let's go in 'er, Colonel," ejaculated one of the members of our company. "I 'gin to feel sorta as 'f I was to hum already. Let's have some Yankee drinks." But the Colonel wouldn't go, having given up drinking long since, and but one or two were found who cared to step inside to shake hands with the Yankee author of the beautiful stanza given above.

Presently the refreshment partakers came out of the saloon, or whatever the place is called here. There was a look of disgust visible on the countenance of each and every one of them, while several clenched fists bid defiance to the air. It was some time before any of the drinkers would speak. Finally he who had been so anxious to taste "hum spirits" ejaculated:

"Damme! I hain't got over it yet. Thar wa'n't no Yankee thar, nor no hum likers. A — Mexican jist give us pulky-pulqui, a native liquor—and we haven't got the stuff out of our mouths yet."

We afterward ascertained that the poetical sign was the work of an American practical joker, who persuaded the Mexican saloonkeeper that he would make lots of money out of American customers by displaying it.—City of Mexico letter.

"Let the Fool Remain."

Mr. Septimus Brightly was an aristocrat and a man of rank. He had held many offices of honor and of profit, and he deemed himself well worthy of all honor that had been conferred upon him.

This was the man who, somewhat late in life, took to himself a young wife. The woman whom he had thus chosen to honor was several years younger than himself. She was five-and-thirty and he five-and-fifty.

However, though younger, she was a widow, and possessed of considerable wealth. And she was quite handsome, also, beside being intelligent, witty and vivacious.

She had but one failing, one drawback, in the Honorable Septimus' estimation; she was Scotch by birth, and retained much of her native idiom and accent, of which habit her husband tried to break her.

More than once Mrs. Brightly had begged of her husband not to borrow trouble on account of her speech; but she laid it upon him most emphatically that he should not, under any circumstances, allude to her peculiarity of pronunciation in public.

For a time after this all went well. At length, however, the autocrat manifested himself. It was at an evening party, given by himself and wife, where many notables were present.

In the course of the dinner the lady called to a servant and bade him take away the fools (her pronunciation of fowls).

Said her husband, very pompously, and pointedly:

"You mean fowls, my dear!"
"Oh, yes," she returned with a charming smile; then to the servant: "John, you may remove the fowls, and let the fool remain!"

It is doubtful if he ever ventured upon a like experiment again.—New York Ledger.
